"MAKING OTHER PLANS"

JOHN LENNON

September

Students returned to campus to learn that Katy Smith Abbott, vice president for student affairs and dean of the college, planned to step down from her role in the administration at the end of December. Baishakhi Taylor, the current dean of students, would become interim vice president for student affairs on Jan. 1.

The Class of 2018's own singer-songwriter Rubby Paulino and poet-rapper Noname headlined a concert kicking of the annual "Start of School Fest held on the main lawn of the Mahaney Center for the Arts (MCA). That same weekend saw the vertical-dance troupe Bandaloop come to campus to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the MCA. Bandaloop wowed audiences with a pair of performances on the side of the MCA building.

The annual Clifford Symposium put a spotlight on the lasting legacy of the Russian Revolution with a three-day program titled "The Soviet Century: 100 Years of Russian Revolution." Through a series of panel discussions, guest lectures, performances, and art exhibitions, the campus community engaged numerous topics related to the formation of the Soviet Union and its major presence on the world stage during the twentieth century.

October

Students and College administers gathered in Wilson Hall for a forum on student life, with a focus on the results of recent student surveys. The Campus reported that "student attendance at the event was relatively sparse, with the number of students roughly equaling the two dozen administrators present."

Associate Professor of Spanish Juana Gamero de Coca died, a loss that devastated the community. Mourners filled Mead Chapel for a memorial service to remember a scholar, teacher, and friend, who, said Gloria Estela González Zenteno, was known for "her warmth; her grand entrances as she greeted colleagues, students, friends; her radiant smile."

Former Democratic Congressman (Massachusetts) Barney Frank and former Republican Governor (New Hampshire) John Sununu spoke about free speech and a toxic political climate in a free-wheeling discussion in Wilson Hall.

After a brief hiatus, the Middlebury Classic Quidditch tournament returned to Battell Beach.

November

Nia Robinson '19 lit up the annual TedxMiddlebury event with her moving talk "We Are Not As Lost As We Think We Are." The theme of the event was "Lost and Found."

President Laurie Patton announced that Provost Susan Baldridge would step down at the end of the calendar year. Jeff Cason, vice president for academic affairs, dean of the schools, and professor of political science, would become interim provost on January 1 for an 18-month term.

In an email to the community stating "It is clear to me and, I believe, to many of you, that the essential bond of trust and assumption of good intentions that should unite us is broken," President Laurie Patton convened a campus-wide town hall meeting, one co-sponsored by the Black Student Union and the Student Government Association.

Originally slated to be held in Wilson Hall, overflow crowds necessitated a move to Mead Chapel, where, for the better part of two hours, a tense community conversation unfolded. Among the catalysts for the event were several racially charged incidents and allegations on campus involving graffiti and racial profiling.

The Rough Cut opened in the downtown space formerly occupied by the College-run restaurant 51 Main. In addition to a menu featuring barbeque and other southern delights, the restaurant brought a new item to Middlebury's downtown: a mechanical bull.

The field hockey team knocked off the top-ranked team in the country, Messiah College, 4-0, to win the program's third national championship.

December

The International Students' Organization held its annual show, a highly anticipated event known for its beauty, it's creativity, and its multicultural flair. And this year's performance did not disappoint.

Laurie Patton announced the creation of a new position at the College: Director of Diversity and Inclusion Education and Training. In an email to the community, Patton wrote that the new post was part of Middlebury's ongoing efforts to improve "cultural competency and racial awareness" on campus.

January

On the first Saturday of winter term, Middlebury celebrated its annual Alumni of Color Summit. Among the highlights: a star-studded alumni cast joining a Verbal Onslaught performance, with the spoken word event celebrating its 10th anniversary.

The non-profit org PEN America came to campus for two days, invited by the College to explore "the concepts of community, inclusion, and free speech at Middlebury." The keynote event of the visit was a panel discussion titled "Whose Freedom, Whose Speech? The Future of Community and Free Speech at Middlebury," which drew more than 200 people to Wilson Hall.

The Committee on Speech and Inclusion, formed in response to the aftermath of Charles Murray's visit to campus last March, concluded its eight-month examination of campus culture with a report of findings and recommendations for change.

February

The Class of 2017.5 celebrated the conclusion of their collegiate years by following tradition and skiing down the mountain at the Snow Bowl. A few days later, a new class of Febs arrived. Circle of life and all.

Three public intellectuals—Jill Lepore, Kwame Anthony Appiah, and Jonathan Haidt—held court in Wilson Hall as they wrestled with the notion of creating a "robust public sphere." Part of Middlebury's Critical Conversations series, "the conversation spanned from the writings of John Milton to the philosophy of John Stuart Mill, from social psychology experiments to thoughts on diversity in higher education—and challenged students to think about the echo chambers they might inhabit when living and working among like-minded peers" (as Katie Flagg wrote for the Middlebury newsroom).

During winter break, six Middlebury Alternative Break Trip (MAlt) cohorts traveled to West Virginia, Costa Rica, Washington state, Atlanta, and Haiti, as part of an annual effort to provide service-oriented alternatives to traditional winter break activities.

Upon their return, the groups convened in Atwater Dining Hall for an evening of reflection and recollection of their journeys.

The streak for the longest running winter carnival continues, as Midd celebrated its 95th annual carnival with Nordic and alpine races, improv shows, fireworks, the local ice show, and the winter ball.

March

College Chaplain Laurie Jordan announced that she intended to retire on June 30. Jordan, who had served as chaplain for 22 years, influenced innumerable students during her tenure.

On a blustery, snowy day, hundreds of Middlebury students, faculty, and staff joined local high schoolers and community members on the town's Cross Street bridge in recognition of the National School Walkout Day, which was organized by the national org Women's March Youth Empowerment.

Filmmakers Ken Burns and Lynn Novick joined Vietnam vet and Midd alum Michael Heaney '64 in a fascinating panel discussion in Wilson Hall, which focused on Burns' latest project The Vietnam War. Following a brief screening of clips from the series, the three panelists answered questions from moderator Jim Ralph, the Rehnquist Professor of American History and Culture at Middlebury. During their time on campus, Burns, Novick, and Heaney also visited classes in film and media culture and history.

Architecture students in Assistant Professor John McLeod's Intermediate Architectural Design course partnered with Habitat for Humanity to design a residence that will be constructed for two Middlebury families in 2019. The students developed three approaches to the duplex project, including a single subdivided building, two buildings loosely connected, or two completely separate structures.

April

Civil Rights leader Diane Nash captivated a Mead Chapel crowd with tales from the movement—while also delivering potent messages for the here and now. "The only way this country will make it through this period and survive, with citizens having any reasonable measure of rights, is if citizens take the future of this country into our own hands," said Nash.

Five street artists hailing from cities located between Vermont and Mexico came together on April 10 at the McCullough Student Center for a conversation about how murals can build communities. The discussion was particularly relevant since four of the artists were in the midst of a weeklong residency at the College to conduct hands-on painting workshops and create a new mural inside the student center. The resulting work in McCullough was unveiled at the end of the month, and it is a stunning piece of art.

The annual Spring Student Symposium filled Bicentennial Hall with more than 300 student presentations, a five-fold increase from the inaugural symposium in 2006. Laurie Patton welcome all, noting: "In presentations, poster sessions, performances, panels, and readings, students are sharing their intellectual passions and discovering what inspires their classmates."

May

The men's tennis team won its third NCAA Championship (2004, 2010) with a 5-3 victory over third-ranked and NESCAC foe Bowdoin. The top-ranked Panthers finish their spring with a single-season record 25 wins (25-4). The national championship is Middlebury's second title of 2017-18 (field hockey) and the 35th overall since 1995.

Under overcast, but dry, skies amid temperatures in the low 60s, the 532 members of the Classes of 2018 graduated from Middlebury. Pulitzer Prize winning journalist and author Isabel Wilkerson delivered a stirring Commencement address, in which she called on the graduates to express radical empathy in their lives.

Amnesty International AT MIDDLEBURY

"We work to protect people wherever justice, freedom, truth and dignity are denied. We investigate and expose abuses, educate and mobilize the public, and help transform societies to create a safer, more just world. AI's most well-known issue is to free "prisoners of conscience": since its founding in 1961, AI has helped to release more than 40,000 prisoners of conscience. Today we continue to stand for prisoners of conscience, but also prisoners of violence, and prisoners of poverty."

Badminton CLUB

"The badminton club provides a fun and welcoming forum in which members of the College community can learn about and improve their skills in the game of badminton. The club supports its members by scheduling court time and maintaining a stock of equipment for members' use."

Baggage Claim
IMPROV GROUP

"Baggage Claim Comedy was founded by Sabian Edouard '21, Edgar Leon '21, and Charles Rainey '19.5 in the fall of 2018. Baggae Claim is the first improv organization at Middlebury to be comprised predominantly of students or color. We endeavor to foster an environment for improv at Middlebury that is more inclusive of groups that have been under- and misrepresented in the comedy scene on campus."

Bobolinks
A CAPPELLA

"This year, the Middlebury Bobolinks turned 26, and boy, was it an action-packed and fun-filled year! The 2017-2018 school year included a fall tour, trips to other college campuses, and lots of gigs all around Vermont. We also got some new apparel, arranged lots of new songs, and made many new friendships that will last a lifetime! Cheers to the '17-'18 B-O-B-B bobos!"

Chromatic
SOCIAL HOUSE

"Chromatic House seeks to provide an environment for students in pursuit of The Arts. Here, students could find space to develop and demonstrate their talents in visual art, music performance and production, theater and improvisation, dance, and the proliferation of digital audio through radio. Living with other artistically-inclined people would cultivate an enriching and synergetic atmosphere for personal artistic growth. Chromatic shows the student body that one does not have to identify as artistic to appreciate and benefit from an artist's talents. This phenomenon is a manifestation of the liberal arts experience and could be applied to other seemingly narrow fields of interest."

Community FRIENDS

"Community Friends is a one-on-one mentoring programs that matches Middlebury College students with children ages 6-12 in Addison County. Mentors meet with their matches for at least two hours per week. Matches can have fun exploring campus, crafting, attending sports events, eating in the dining halls, and much more!"

Debate SOCIETY

"The Middlebury Debate Society is a student run organization that belongs to and competes in the American Parliamentary Debate Association (APDA). Aside from participating at weekly tournaments at universities across the country and hosting an annual tournament for other colleges to attend, we also compete at select international debate competitions."

*Photos Courtesy of Debate Society

Dolci

"Dolci is a student-run restaurant that employs students as waitstaff, cooks, and chefs to prepare a gourmet meal roughly once a week."

Middlebury EQUESTRIANS

"This is a club for any and all students who love horses and want to ride, show or just spend time with horses. We have both a showing hunter/jumper team and a non-showing club, all levels welcome. The show team competes in Zone 1, Region 2 of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association against schools of varying sizes, including Dartmouth, University of Vermont, University of New Hampshire, and more."

"Evolution is a dance crew started and developed by students who love to move, groove, and everything in between. Combining global diasporas of dance with fresh and exciting choregraphy, the group creates pieces that show the evolutionary trend of urban dance. From African to Latin American to Caribbean dance, Evolution showcases how dances of the world have evolved to become the smooth and intricate moves of Hip-Hop, Contemporary, and Modern music."

Club de FRANÇAIS

"The French Club was re-started in 2015 to celebrate French and Francophone culture on campus, and had a great 2017-2018 year. This fall, the club took a trip to Café Provence in Brandon to enjoy some traditional French cuisine prepared by chef Robert Barral. Over J-term, the club held a dessert crepe night with a variety of sweet toppings. The club finished off the spring with an outdoor picnic in the French House backyard, taking advantage of some beautiful weather and catering from Otter Creek Bakery."

Hillel

"This was an awesome year for Hillel! We organized some new events such as having Dartmouth Hillel over for Shabbat, a Purim masquerade ball, and a morning at the Snow Bowl; having a fun chocolate Seder at the end of Passover and a fruits and nuts Seder for tu-bish vat; trampolining and ramen in burlington; a mead-making and tasing workshop with a Midd Hillel alum; and heading up to Ben and Jerry's for a tour of the factory. Hillel Board really stepped up Shabbat with many themes to go along with Lauren Finkelstein's amazing challah and food, including an Avi Shaffer Grant interfaith Shabbat, Of course, we always love our bagel brunches, and welcomed the first year febs with a delicious bagel/waffel display. This year after much hard work by the Jewish Community, the College dedicated the FIC Annex to Hillel as part of the Jewish Center! We had a great year and are excited about all the fun and Judaism to come in the future!"

INGOMA

"Ingoma (meaning "song" in the South African Zulu language) is a small, fun-loving vocal community at Middlebury College that takes pride in bringing the beautiful harmonies and rhythms of the African continent and diaspora to Vermont. Our members come from diverse backgrounds around the world, and cherish rehearsals as a time to learn about each other's cultures and music traditions."

InterVarsity
CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

"Middlebury InterVarsity Christian Fellowship students attended this service based spring break trip to Puerto Rico where we worked at a fisher-men's cooperative, rebuilding a roof and a wall that were damaged in Hurricane Maria. The location was still without power 7 months after Hurricane Maria and had received no help from rebuilding groups before our team arrived. Along with students from Brown and MIT, we stayed at a church up in the mountains of Mamey, Puerto Rico. We spent our evenings discussing passages from scripture and also hearing from community members about the hurricane and Puerto Rico's history."

International STUDENTS' ORGANIZATION

"International Students' Organization (ISO) of Middlebury College is a cultural group that welcomes all students, whether international or domestic. The Organization's main objectives are to share and discuss global diversity on campus and to foster a welcoming, safe environment for foreign students. The ISO's many events span the academic year and include trips to Burlington, a cultural show, international trivia nights, cooking workshops, community dinners and more."

ALTERNATIVE BREAKS

"In 2017-2018 MAlt coordinated two local fall trips, 6 Feb break trips, and a spring break trip in the US and abroad. The goal of the trips is to give students the opportunity to meaningfully engage in communities outside of the Middlebury area in a manner that broadens their worldview and challenges them to analyze their privilege and role as active citizens both locally and globally. The trips foster mutually beneficial relationships between Middlebury and other communities by partnering with local organizations to act in service and solidarity."

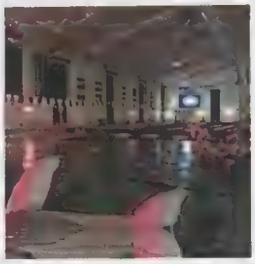
COLLEGE ACTIVITIES BOARD

"MCAB is the largest student programming body on campus. We plan everything from small concerts, Atwater dinners and Free Friday Films to big speakers, large scale concerts and Winter Carnival.

Our mission is to enrich the quality of student life by orchestrating and executing consistent and innovative programming, upholding College traditions, and providing support for the whole community, in the spirit of collaboration.



We are made up of a four committees: Concerts, Traditions, Social, and Speakers. Each committee is headed by two Fellows, who sit on our executive board along with the President."

MGallery

"M Gallery has been established to serve as a nerve center for the public display and discussion of art. The gallery's foremost goal is to aid the professional development of artistically inclined students at Middlebury College. The gallery's organizers see an incredible body of artistically talented students at Middlebury but feel that frequently students neither realize the talents of their fellow students nor make their own artistic talents known. The establishment of M Gallery is meant to help showcase the great artistic talents of Middlebury students and facilitate interdisciplinary and cooperative artistic projects.

The gallery will maintain a constantly rotating exhibition series of art work across mediums. In addition to the artwork on display, the gallery will host performing arts productions such as musical performances, theatrical stagings, and dance pieces, just to name a few. The gallery will also host lectures and discussions on topics relevant to the arts culture at Middlebury.

At the heart of M Gallery's mission is to facilitate greater interaction between and within the Middlebury town and college communities. The gallery hopes to work with Middlebury town community organizers and business leaders and Middlebury alumni, faculty, staff, and students to create the strongest artistically empowering community possible."

MiddFly

"This was a great year for MiddFly! We managed to really ramp up the activities whether it be our Fireside Fly Tying sessions during the winter months, getting out on the water or hosting fun events. MiddFly was able to co-host the Fly Fishing Film Tour with the Middlebury Mountaineer and it was a great event with a turnout of over 250 people that helped support the local New Haven River Anglers. This spring, MiddFly members made a big impact on the water both catching some great fish and cleaning up our local rivers. We can only hope for an even better year next year!"

Mixed Kids OF MIDDLEBURY

"A social club for multiracial students. MKM is a group that aims to represent, empower and build a community of Middlebury students that identify as mixed, biracial, multiracial and/or multiethnic. The organization also aims to upbuild and educate the overall broader student body about multiracial culture and matters. "

On Tap

TAP DANCE TROUPE

"On Tap is Middlebury College's only tap dance troupe. On Tap choreographs and performs its own show at the end of each semester. We also often perform around campus, featuring in other organization's shows relating to dance and the arts. During J-Term, On Tap also offers a tap dancing workshop to the college community to students of all levels; we even provide the tap shoes!"

Organic FARM

"Middlebury College Organic Farm (MCOF) is a student organization that works with the farm on campus and those in the surrounding areas to provide education opportunities for students to immerse themselves in the world of agriculture and food. The farm on campus is a 2 acre knoll with garden beds, beehives, 2 hoophouses, a shed, an outdoor classroom, and a pizza oven. Through an internship program, weekly volunteer hours, and open access, students, faculty, and community members have the chance to learn more about food, sustainablility, agriculture, earth science, mindfulness, teamwork, and relationships through experiential learning opportunities. As a student organization, we hope to extend this education beyond campus and deepen the relationship between students and the land around them. By organizing farm visits, creating food workshops, bringing speakers to campus, and planning community events, such as the Fall Harvest/Spring Planting Festivals, we provide hands-on learning opportunities and spaces to come together, connect, and find solace within the daily stresses of work, school, and life."

Project PENGYOU

"This academic year was the first major year for Project Pengyou, an organization on campus that strives to build a cohort of U.S.-China bridge builders who are interested in engaging in dialogue about U.S.-China relations. In addition to our member meetings and discussion, some of our major events this year included: screenings of U.S.-China-related movies, a talk discussing Chinese foreign aid to the Khmer Rouge, a conversation with the first American to join the Chinese Communist Party, a panel on the impact of the rise of China on global governance, a spring barbecue with Asian Students in Action (ASIA) and a discussion on the leadership styles and visions of leaders Trump, Xi and Putin. With members ranging from international Chinese students to Chinese Americans to students studying China and its culture, we look forward to bringing more engaging events and discussions around topics related to U.S.-China relations in the coming years."

SPUTNIK

RUSSIAN SPEAKING AND EAST EUROPEAN SOCIETY

"Sputnik is a cultural organization dedicated to the celebration and exploration of the culture of the many different countries that once formed the Eastern bloc. Sputnik is emblematic of this shared heritage in two ways - it invokes the multinational cooperation of cosmonauts from Mongolia to East Germany, and the word itself in its original Russian meaning means 'a travelling companion.'"

"Travel
MAKES ONE MODEST.

YOU SEE WHAT A TINY PLACE YOU OCCUPY IN THE world."

"The Thames at Dawn"

BEN BELINSKI

If you wake early enough, usually on a weekday, and walk down to the banks of the River Thames, you will be graced with the sights and sounds of Oxford's thirty-odd college crew teams running through their practice routines up and down the broad river, beneath a slowly breaking morning sun. You'll hear the metronomic swing of the blades across the water, all eight of them working in perfect unison, and the calls of the coxswains to 'back it port side,' or 'hold starboard,' echoing under the walls of medieval bridges. On mornings like these—while you watch the dense fog begin to lift ever so slightly, as the dark figures of rivaling college boats sweep along the quiet river—it's only natural to hold onto the moment for as long as you can. You take a photo, and look out over the calmly passing water, reflecting on the simple beauty that is brought into the world with every rising sun.

"Baikal Ice"

BRYCE BRAY

Lake Baikal is the deepest lake in the world, able to hold four Empire State Buildings stacked on top of one another. It has the only population of exclusively freshwater seals and many other animals related to those found in the Arctic, but no one knows how they got to the middle of Asia, just a hundred miles from the Mongolian border. Baikal's ice is so strong that trains used to run across the surface of the lake. Now tourists tend to joyride in ATVs from one point to another. The cracks in the photo are reminders that the ice is anything but stationary. Sometimes huge ruptures appear due to tectonic activity (Baikal is a rift lake, growing larger every year), temperature changes and tidal forces. Timing is everything when you decide to take a trip on Baikal's ice highway!

"Parisian Purple"

SARAH BRECKINRIDGE

Whenever visiting cities abroad, I found that the best way to really get to know a place was to simply walk everywhere. In Paris in particular, I felt the most inspired by my strolls through the city streets. Every building was gorgeous, clean and well planned with perfected rooflines, adorable balconies and exquisite moldings. After a brief visit to the Jardin de Luxembourg, a friend and I meandered the streets in the surrounding district in search of a mid-afternoon pit stop at a patisserie. When coming up to a crossroads, the most beautiful purple Paulownia tree stood right smack in the middle of the intersection. The blooming tree looked striking against the stark white apartment buildings that, practically on purpose, had matched the landmark tree with wisteria-filled window boxes. The color combination's sheer perfection deserved a picture and remains imprinted in my mind whenever I envision the city of love.

"Small Man, Big World"

BEN CATT

As human beings we tend to get so caught up in our own angst and complexities that we often forget that there's more to us, as earth's inhabitants, than what we might believe. There's this magnificent world filled with sublime peaks, intricately woven valleys, and luminous bodies of water, which harmoniously interact in the space we call nature. It'd be a shame to go your whole life and miss it. Throughout the day, remember to look up from your smart phone to witness this astonishing world we call home. A therapeutic relaxation liberated from daily stresses may be the result.

"Swim Call After Class"

ANNA CERF

One sunny afternoon forty miles off the New Zealand coast, our captain instructed us to bring towels to class. We didn't want to get our hopes up too much because, until that point, far we had not been allowed to swim off the tall ship that also served as our classroom. With an active volcano in the distance, visibility in the ocean down to 30 meters, and rising temps, we knew that a swim would be an absolutely unforgettable experience. Luckily, our captain agreed and let us jump off the bowsprit and deck into the Pacific waters. While the swim was the most refreshing of my life, it was also the most eerie. The sonar system that tracked our depth emitted a strange beep that, a couple seconds later, repeated itself quietly after reflecting off of the ocean floor more than a mile beneath us. I tried to keep my head above the water to avoid it. After the swim, I came back onto the deck to take this picture and avoid the sharks that were supposedly attracted to groups that stayed in the water for too long.

"Taxi Ride through Sierra Maestra"

NATALIE CHEUNG

Outside of Santiago de Cuba sits the Sierra Maestra, a wild and untamed mountain range that served as a rebel's refuge during many political disputes. From the backseat of a teal 1950s Ferrari, I watched the mountains unfold through a warped windshield. The dashboard fan could not compete with the heat of the sun as the taxi driver drove fearlessly through the winding roads. Imagining the stories hidden in the wrinkles of the hills, we continued on.

"The Street Market"

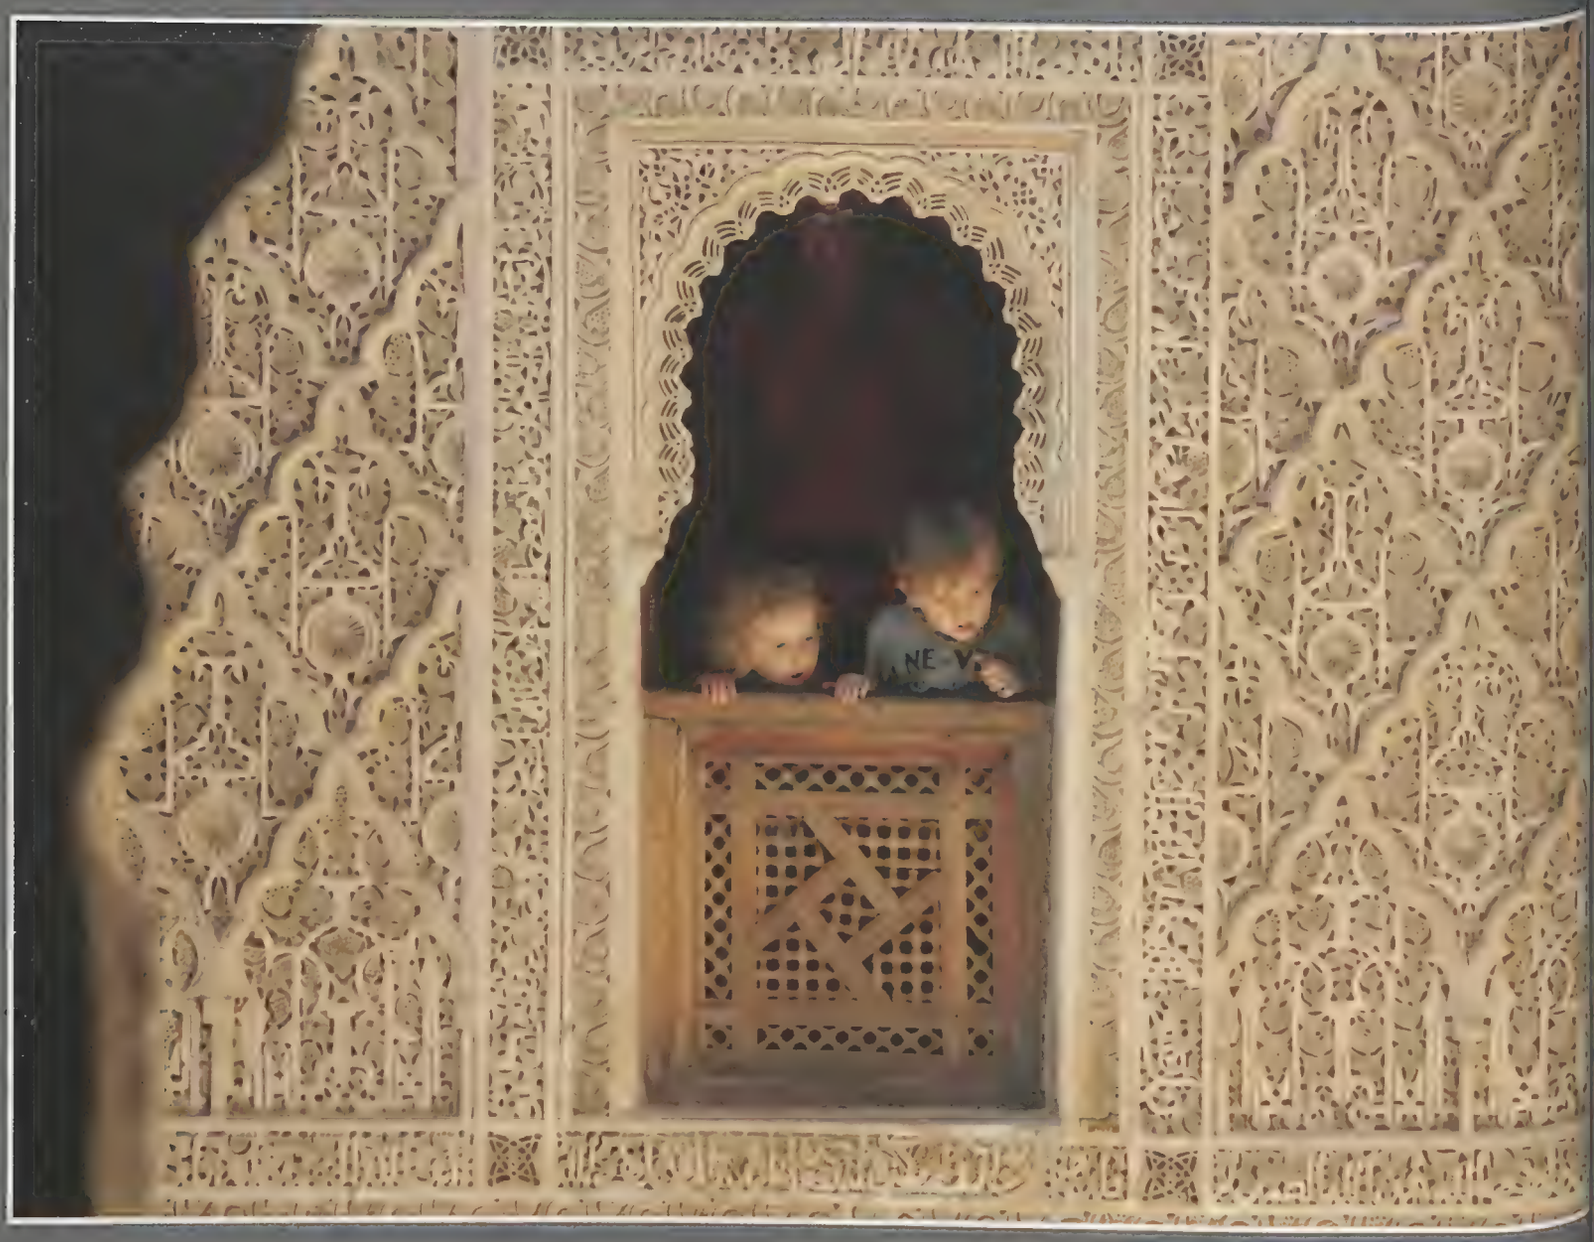
SARAH CORSICO

One of my favorite things to do when visiting another country or city is to find a local street market. I find that the intricacies of a place, its history and its culture can often be found in the items being sold, the food at the carts and the people behind the stands. I found this particular market, when wandering with a friend through the main square of Catania. We had finished making our way through the Sunday fish market, turned the corner, walked up the street past stands of fresh food and happened upon this pepper truck. I'm still amazed by all of the colors.

"An Open Door"

SARAH CORSICO

We left early, hoping to explore until meeting my friend later in the afternoon. We had never been to Morocco, had limited knowledge of Rabat and were relying on instructions from my friend - which outlined some directions and highlights to see in the city. Myself, the non-planner, "the only way to explore is to get lost" type of person convinced my twin sister, the planner, we should find the Kasbah des Oudaias, as recommended by my friend. Upon arriving, we easily found the mosque, the ancient gateway, and the white and blue homes marked by their beautifully carved doors. We could not, however, find the gardens. After wandering aimlessly, and a few wrong turns, we happened upon an Italian tour group. Hoping they would have a sense of the city, I desperately asked, in French, to point us in the direction of the garden. The guide pointed to a path we had passed several times. There were two beautiful doors right before the gardens themselves, one of which, is pictured above. In many ways, I think this photo is reminiscent of not only my adventure in Morocco, but my entire year, last year.



"Kids in a Window"

ELEANOR EAGAN

On a day of sightseeing it's easy for each attraction to blend into the next, with the press of people in overcrowded spaces distracting from genuine appreciation. I loved that these kids' expressions of awe shook me out of that, forcing me to stop for a brief moment. All of the bustle fades away in this picture. Moroccan architecture is inspiring in its detail; the sheer mass of intricacies can make it difficult to absorb all at once. If you pause for a moment, however, it pulls you in, through each layer of carvings, through the ages even, back to the people laboring over the smallest section of this magnificent masterpiece. Moroccan doors and windows are keyhole-shaped, and this moment felt like a metaphorical key to a deeper appreciation of that place.

"The Happiest Thai Farmer"

JULIE EHRLICH

It was a rainy day in the rice fields in a small Thai village 20 minutes for Khon Kaen, Thailand. This man owned a small farm with his family with 3 cows, a handful of goats and a bunch of chickens. While doing surveying for our public health class, we stumbled onto this beautiful house farm and attempted to communicate in our broken, rudimentary Thai. We were truly a site to see. Two American girls, an old Thai farmer and his daughter standing in the rain giggling. While we could barely communicate, happiness and laughter transcend all cultures.

"The Temple of the Golden Pavilion"

SHANE HEALY

The Temple of the Golden Pavilion (Kinkaku-ji) is one of the most famous historic sites in Kyoto, which at one time was the capital city of Japan. The gold leaf covering the building is meant to mitigate and purify any negativity or thoughts of death; even so, in 1950 a young monk named Hayashi Yoken deliberately burned the structure down before attempting suicide. Now that Kinkaku-ji has become such a popular tourist destination this may seem unthinkable, but the past is always closer than it appears.

"Call Me, Beep Me"

SOFI HECHT

It's easy to get lost in the Sahara and feel far away from everything, especially as most trips down there involve 8+ hours of driving. I had walked to the top of a dune to look at the view of rolling sand as far as the eye can see. Looking down I realized that the rest of my group was in a hurry to leave and I was still a good sand-trudge away. I was feeling particularly dazed as I hurried back, when I looked up and saw this camel guide chatting on his cell phone, wearing traditional tribal clothing on top and jeans on the bottom. I felt like I was on Mars the whole time we were in the desert (and had no phone service) but this guy did?!

"Kneading Dough"

SOFT HECHT

One of my good friends (also on the Middlebury in Morocco program) said her first word was "bread." Boy, did she choose a good place to study abroad! There's a kind of bread -- sometimes multiple -- for every occasion. This woman taught us how to make the classic bread rolls that they often use to eat tajine, in lieu of utensils.

"Cuba Does Not Need Your Edits"

CAITLIN KLEMME

This beach has been named one of the most beautiful beaches in the world, and I believe it. I believe it is one of the most beautiful beaches in the world for more than just it's physical beauty though. Americans have a long history of coming to Isla de la Juventud, a small island to the south of mainland Cuba. There was a university on the island where students from the United States, and all over the world, would come to take courses on Marxism, Leninist theory, and socialism. Because of this, history of Americans in Isla runs completely contrary to the history of Americans on the mainland (i.e. money laundering, casinos, the mafia). Despite consistent tensions in U.S.-Cuban relations for hundreds of years, Cuba has not backed down to the "edits" that each U.S. administration asks for. Why are we so obsessed with changing the way a country is run to the point where we punish it economically for years? To me, this picture represents everything that Cuba is: breath-taking, simple, warm, welcoming and unedited. While this might be one of the most beautiful places on earth, walking down the street in the city or in the countryside, I see the same things. Going to Cuba, you do not need your photo editing software, and on a different level, Cuba does not need your political edits. "Es Cuba." It's Cuba. It is what it is.

"Stadion Station" // "Tunnel Art"

ALISON KRANER

All of the metro stations in Stockholm are part of an underground art gallery, sometimes referred to as the longest art installation in the world. The result is painted cave ceilings over your head as you ride into the station and stone sculptures breaking through the floors to rise up from under the platforms. I traveled through this station every day on my way to and from school and took this photo one quiet afternoon while waiting for the train that would take me back into central station.

"Evening Roundup"

NORA LENHARD

As the sun was setting somewhere south of Uyuni, Bolivia, local herders rounded up their llamas with the help of small dogs and rocks thrown close enough to the animals to scare them back into a group. Llamas are valuable in a region too dry to grow most crops, and each owner marks their herd with colorful yarn to keep track of the animals and ensure they all make it home after a day of grazing. Keeping her llamas fiercely in check, this woman caused a tiny commotion in an otherwise quiet town on the edge of the world's largest salt flat, but once she disappeared around the curve in the road, the desert stillness returned.

"Hiking Petra"

ANNA LUECK

I had been waiting to visit Petra since the minute I landed in Jordan, but once I finally got there, the tickets were overpriced, the bus ride long, the walking path overcrowded with camels and horses and khaki-clad tourists. Looking for peace, and an escape from what we were—tourists, foreigners, voyeurs-- my friends and I looked upward, to the hundreds of carved-stone steps ascending smoothly towards the hidden monastery. We encountered far fewer people on this walk, just a quiet family who asked us to take their photo and a worker who asked us to share lunch with him. We walked slowly into the mountain, each step carved by human hand and smoothed by thousands of feet, and, surrounded by the quiet majesty of thousands of years of history, felt a little less like visitors.

"Exam Victory"

VICTORIA PIPAS

Oxford undergraduates have a long history of "trashing" their peers as they come out of the final exam of their academic careers (bear in mind, of course, that the traditional sub-fusc attire and robes is to be worn in the exam hall). Customarily, finalists are trashed with everything from powdered and liquid paint to confetti, shaving cream, and silly string. The final dousing usually involves opening a well-shaken bottle of cheap champagne. I got a string of action shots as my friend Oz exited the exam hall victorious and was met by a barrage of assailants. He was soon unrecognizable under a thick layer of shaving cream and confetti, crowned with a tiara. I loved this moment for the contrast between stiff university exam procedure and the pure gaiety of student life.

"Enjoying the Show"

ANDREW PLOTCH

Across the island from Havana, lies Cuba's second largest city, Santiago de Cuba. The city's vibrant Afro-Caribbean culture manifests at the visually overwhelming Casa del Carribe, a history and arts center. In this photo, after the work week, locals have a drink while enjoying a rhumba band and dancers. People were just watching the first part of the show, but by the second half, the whole patio was dancing, with friends, family, and strangers.

"Valparaiso"

ALICE ROBERTS

I spent my semester in Santiago, Chile, but on this particular weekend, I managed to get out to the coast to see Valparaiso. Santiago is a very active city, but not like Valparaiso. Valparaiso on this day was bright. People were smiling and laughing. Buses were whizzing by, cutting corners at every turn. Honestly, if you take one misstep off the sidewalk, you'd probably get hit. Once I made it down the winding hills to the port, dodging buses and people, the activity only seemed to pick up. Tourists were being swindled out of too much money, and boats were moving in and out of this particular area, unloading and loading up families to take them on rides to see the cargo ships. I probably took this photo 10 times before I was able to actually capture the atmosphere, because there was no point where anything was still. 9/10 of my photos are blurred and indistinguishable, but for some reason, I got lucky, and managed to get all that movement, the hustle and bustle, into one clear shot.

"Huoguo Time"

JIN-MI SOHN

Huoguo () in Chinese translates to hot pot. But to me and many others, huoguo is more than just a hot pot for cooking variety of meats and veggies, it's a communal pot. This picture was taken in Sichuan (), a city known for its spicy and hot huoguo. Before going to China, I had eaten different variations of hot pot, but what I failed to realize until eating hot pot in China were the common roots of community and a sense of gathering together over food found in huoguo. So much of the Chinese culture is imbedded in community and it makes sense that it would be over good food. As you look at this picture, I hope that you too can be reminded of the times you gathered with ones you loved over some delicious food!

"Hooker Valley Stroll"

ISABELLE TABAH

It is difficult to explain what New Zealand was like to friends and family who weren't there to experience it with me. I often resort to describing it as an island of postcard pictures, landscape images that seem too good to be true, too strikingly beautiful to be real. I took close to 3,000 photos during my time there and when I wasn't photographing, I was admiring. I would remove the camera so that I could have an uninterrupted moment with the scenery to remind myself that it was in fact real and not just an image on the back of a post card. The day spent in Mount Cook / Aoraki National Park was one of the best. On a warm September day my friends and I walked the Hooker Valley Trail over boardwalks and bridges through a valley and surrounded by white peaks, ending at a glacial lake, turquoise with till sediment. Friends skipped rocks, aiming for a hole in the last chunk of unthawed ice that sat in the lake while others polar plunged. All of us were unconcerned about our crisped skin, the sun and warmth were welcome and our attention was elsewhere, captivated by the natural world around us.

"Marketplace"

VIGNESH RAMACHANDRAN

the air is different in the marketplace of occupied
Al-Khalil
(Hebron). it's heavier and lighter at the same time,
pregnant with pain and empty of hope.

i wonder to myself,
is this what my great-grandmother's life was like in the british raj?
what it was like to be Black in the jim crow south?

every prayer inspected,
every movement scrutinized,
every laugh punished.

the colorful pashminas and the Palestinian keffiyas that line the sides of the souq can't distract from the main attraction --- the four boy-soldiers strutting through the marketplace.

"Polar Night Approaching"

SEBASTIAN ZAVOICO

At 78°N, the town of Longyearbyen experiences the extremes of seasonality. For four months during the polar summer, the sun never dips below the horizon, whereas for four months in the polar winter, the sun never rises above the horizon. Polar winter doesn't mean that the light disappears completely for those four months, however. The 2-3 weeks after the sun sets for the last time and before the sun rises for the first time are known for its exquisite display of blues, violets, reds, and oranges as the sun's rays play with the atmosphere and reflect down onto the landscape. This photo was taken a few hours after the sun made one of its last visits, and attempts to capture the beauty of the coming of winter and the town tucking in for polar night.

"The Crown"

SEBASTIAN ZAVOICO

During the polar night, northern lights can be seen all day long. During this particular light show, the northern lights temporarily crowned the prominent Nordenskiöld mountain, as if acknowledging its status as the highest mountain close to town.

"Mountain Air"

ELIZABETH ZHOU

I spent the final two weeks of my semester in India traveling to various mountain towns (also known as "hill stations") in the state of Himachal Pradesh, twelve hours north of New Delhi. This photo was taken in the tiny village of Tosh, a hidden gem at the far end of Parvati Valley. The roads leading up to Tosh are so bumpy and elevated that no buses can safely travel across them; instead, anyone wishing to visit this lush, green village must trek or hire a cab from the nearest hill station. The beauty of Tosh cannot be understated: Wherever you turn, paradise on earth surrounds you. The stillness of the air, the brilliance of the greenery, and the quiet friendliness of the locals all lend themselves to a startling sense of serenity that is difficult to find elsewhere.

"In the Middle of the Universe"

HARUNA TAKEDA

When I took this photo, there was nothing actually special about it. We are always in the middle of the universe. We just don't feel it. Still, this night was special for me because I felt it. I saw it. I saw that I was, in fact, standing still, staring at the universe, in the middle of the universe. That moment, I was surrounded by sky and ground full of stars.
